Frye's legislation focused on reducing jail overcrowding moves to Senate

The Indiana House of Representative recently voted unanimously to advance State Rep. Randy Frye's (R-Greensburg) legislation continuing to address jail overcrowding across the state.

Under House Bill 1068, counties would establish a local or regional justice reinvestment advisory council to review criminal justice systems, policies and procedures. Local councils and the state Justice Reinvestment Advisory Council would then be tasked with reviewing and evaluating local jail overcrowding and recommend solutions.

The Indiana House of Representatives Tuesday voted unanimously in support of State Rep. Randy Frye's (R-Greensburg) legislation that would make it easier for communities across the state to install Safe Haven Baby Boxes.

"Jail overcrowding is a complex issue, and many of our local jails struggle with repeat offenders," Frye said. "We continuously are working to address this ongoing issue, and this bill would give another tool to help local communities safely reduce inmate populations, and remove the strain on staff and budgets."

According to Frye, his legislation would also have the state council work with local councils to promote evidencebased practices and recidivism-reduction programs such as probation services, and mental health and addiction treatment and recovery services.

In response to a report from the Indiana Jail Overcrowding Task Force, the General Assembly passed legislation in 2020, which was also authored by Frye, allowing Indiana's jails to report population data to a new statewide database on who is in jail, why they are incarcerated, and how long they have been or will be behind bars.
